

A Hard Life Can Seem So Easy At Times

7/29/08 6:37 AM

Dear God,

At times you make it all seem so easy. Praise and worship You and all our troubles seem to pail in compare to the rest of the worlds. Just to know You and to be loved by You is all I need. Why everybody can't see that is amazing to me. Especially if they already know you, why can't that be enough for others. You truly supply our every needs so what more could we ask. I just can't seem to do enough for you. I want to shout from the roof tops of your loving kindness and forgiveness.

I so look forward to the day when all is right with my mission and You call me home. It will not be until I am done so I know I am not done yet. It will not be until Cindy is ready, or Joshua can handle it.

I think it will be better for Joshua to have had me as much as he did for the time that he did. Compare that to what I had with my Father or even Cindy had with hers. Joshua and I can talk about anything at this time in our lives and I did not know my father at all. He was the one to get away from to not want to be around to steal from. Joshua knows more right from wrong, more about You, more about where he is going to be in the next five to ten years of his life than I did at his age all because of the time You have given us together.

Cindy is harder as she has a lot more to learn before I go. I wish she would just read, "Battlefield of the Mind". I guess I could read it again then teach it to her as I go along. If I am reading it with that in mind I might be able to get through it again. I have a lot to read right now especially my Max Lucado book. She spends so much time in bed and that is non productive right now. I can't help it when I am fatigued but she seems just bored. I guess it could be all the drugs she is taking makes her fatigued like I am and I just have to accept that. I would just like her to be as motivated as I am to grow in You.

Thanks again for all you do for us though. I do Love You and want to tell the world about You. We will see how that mission goes in the next few years.